

Assistant in Medicine, Division of Emergency Medicine
Lead Physician for Clinician Advocacy, Office of Government Relations
Instructor of Pediatrics, Harvard Medical School

Dr. Amanda Stewart is a pediatric emergency medicine physician at Boston Children's Hospital and South Shore Hospital. After completing her pediatric emergency medicine fellowship, she designed and completed an Advocacy and Public Policy fellowship at Boston Children's Hospital. She is now the Lead Physician for Clinician Advocacy in the Boston Children's Hospital Office of Government Relations, serving as a liaison for clinicians interested in advocacy, providing advocacy education across the institution, and overseeing the Advocacy and Public Policy fellowship. Her research is focused on homeless families seen in the Boston Children's Hospital emergency department, and she has been involved in legislative advocacy on housing insecurity, social determinants of health, health equity, and other child health topics. She is leading the Division's Social Justice working group, working to incorporate antiracism, advocacy, equity, and social justice into the Division's clinical care, research, education, and recruitment efforts.
